"Imitation Mayonnaise"

When a food is labeled "imitation" it is usually because it is similar to a food for which there is a Standard of Identity with the Food and Drug Administration. Since the basic formulas for "standardized foods" are a matter of public record, such foods need not list most of their ingredients. Certain preservatives, artificial flavors and colors must be declared however. Mayonnaise does have a standard of identity which requires that the weight of the product be at least 65% vegetable oil. Also it must contain egg and an acidifying agent such as vinegar. Manufacturers may dilute the acid. If preservatives are added they must be declared.

The new product doesn't meet the Standard of Identity for mayonnaise and therefore is named Imitation Mayonnaise. The imitation product is lower in oil content than is mayonnaise. Water is listed first on the label and, of course, is the most abundant ingredient in the product. Imitation mayonnaise also contains food starch which is not allowed in mayonnaise but is permitted in salad dressing. Artificial colors and flavors are present in Imitation Mayonnaise but are not permitted in salad dressing or mayonnaise.

Mayonnaise contains from 65 to 80% fat while the imitation product contains about half this amount. Thus, the new product contains about 50 calories per tablespoon as opposed to 100 calories in mayonnaise. Imitation Mayonnaise also is less expensive. It is expected to sell for one-third less than some brands of mayonnaise.

The new product is expected to be interchangeable in most recipes; however, there still is some test kitchen work to be done. The basic aim seems to have been to duplicate the taste and texture of mayonnaise while lowering the fat content. Some negative comments have been made about a bitter after-taste when Imitation Mayonnaise was taste-tested alone. However, taste preference has not been conducted for imitation mayonnaise when it is mixed with other foods.

RECIPE OF THE WEEK
Spiced Cantaloupe
Cooking time: 1 hour
Yield: 6 16-ounce jars.

3 ripe, firm cantaloupes, about 1 lb. each
1½ teaspoons alum*
8 cups water
3 cups sugar
2 cups white vinegar
2 pieces stick cinnamon
1 tablespoon all spice
1½ teaspoons whole cloves

1. Pare and seed cantaloupe. Cut into 1-inch cubes, or use a melon-ball cutter.
2. Dissolve alum in water in a heavy kettle.
3. Heat to boiling. Add cantaloupe, and cook for 15 minutes. Drain cantaloupe, and wash well.
4. Combine sugar, vinegar, and spices tied in a piece of cheesecloth in the same kettle.
5. Heat to boiling. Add melon, and cook slowly until fruit is transparent, about 45 minutes.
6. Remove spice bag. Seal in hot sterilized jars.

Note: Serve Spiced Cantaloupe with cold cuts, or spear with toothpicks for an unusual party hors d'oeuvre.

*Alum is an ingredient useful in home pickling to give crispness to melons and other foods.
